BALDNESS.

BEAUTIFUL head of Hair is the grande. A ornament belonging to the human frame. How, strangely the loss of it changes the countenance, and prematurely brings on the appearance of old age, which causes many to recoil at being uncovered, and sometimes even shun society to avoid the jests and sneers of their acquaintance; the remainder of their lives is consequently spent in retirement. In short, not even the loss of property fills the generous thinking youth with that heavy sink-ing gloom as does the loss of his hair. To avert all these unpleasant circumstances, OL-DRIGE'S BALM OF COLUMBIA stops the hair from falling off on the first application, and a few bottles restores it again. It likewise produces eyebrows and whiskers; prevents the hair from turning gray, makes it our beautifully, and frees it from scurf, Numerous certificates of the first respectability in sup port of the virtues of Oldrige's Balm are show by the proprietors.

THE STUDENT. Vith pailid brow and kindling eye,
And lines that thought and feeling stamp,
Were on his forehead, pale and high,
I saw him turn with listless gaze,

The book whose classic pages bore The learning deep of other days,
A by-gone nation's rescued lore; It claimed not now his wonted care ; His thoughts and feelings were not there I saw him, when the queen of night,

Intently gaze on her pure light, As if to road his destiny; Neglected lay his tablets by; His chart and compass were not seen; To him the science of the sky
Was then as though it ne'er had been;

Had claimed her empire in the sky,

The orbs above were shining fair; His thoughts and feelings were not there That midnight lamp has ceased to shed Its hight upon the student's brow, The books to which his soul was wed

Are closed, alas, for ever now; And Luns, in whose hallowed beams His lofty spirit seemed to lave, Now, futive, through the willow gleams, That weeps above his early grave; But Death, to him, had brought no pain; For he had loved-and loved in vain!

MISCELLANEOUS.

From the Genessee Farmer. SOUR KROUT.

Tucker-The manner of preparing this article of food, is not as generally known as its value entitles it to be; and with a desire to extend it to the benefit of your readers, I have written this for publication in your paper. In the fall, after we have had two or three freezing nights, collect as many solid heads of cabbage as you wish to preserve, salt up, (say fifty for a family of six or eight persons,) take off all the green and imperfect leaves, cut each head lengthwise through the heart, and cut that clean out. A cabbage knife should now be procured on which the cabbage should be cut fine, and a strong ceilar or other barrel, previously well soaked and cleaned at hand, the bottom of which to be laid over with cabthe bottom of which to be laid over with cab-bage leaves; and salt now to be well mixed with portions of the cabbage in the proportion of a pint of the former to a heaped bushel of the latter, and these gradually packed in the barrel by gently stamping with a suitable wood-en rammer. When the barrel is marly full, it should be placed in a cool dry celler on huards, the bottom secured from pressing out; a bar-rel head or pieces of boards laid on the top of the cabbage, and a heavy weight laid on them. In a week or ten days the pickle should cover the cabbage, or a weak brine must be prepared water to boil it nearly dry over a smart fire in three hours. Boiled potatoes should always be eaten along with sour krout, as alone it is too fat, cooked in this manner, to make a meal.— The potatoes are better boiled in a separate vessel but they can be boiled with the krout; though very apt to get heavy. Sour krout should be all used before the approach of warm weather, as the quantity of salt here recommended is too small to preserve it. When it BEGS leave to inform his friends and the public, that he has resumed the Profestration of the light character of the following gentlemen;

We 'give it up,' as to the Aldermen; and knock under to Sir John Falstoff, so fat wit-ted, with drinking of old sack, and unbuttoning after supper, and sleeping on the benches till afternoon, that he could at even keep the time of day; and we have nothing to say for the musician, whom Byron in a paroxysm of derision pronounced the fattest hog in Epicuru sty.' But we take issue with our worshipful friends as to all the rest, and insist that 'obesi-ty is a deadly free to genius,' and we return Messrs. Irving, Hamboldt, Hock, &c. upon him as so many weighty arguments to our pur-pose for they have done nothing worthy of themselves since they acquired this comfortable rotundity of stomach, -having apparently swallowed their brains with the hecatombs of swallowed their brains with the hecatombs of fish, flesh and foul offered up to this insatiable ventricle. Depend upon it the belly is the tomb of genius.

What possessed the Commercial to drag in the gaunt raw boned castern Senator, who, in common with Messrs Clay, Calhoun, Poindexter, Gallatin, and a hundred more of our living statesmen, is as lean as the kine of Pharaoh's dream, is more than we can conjecture.

The truth is that nothing fat yet ever culight ened the world; for even all the light of a tallow candle springs from the thin wick. The whole the cabbage, and a heavy weight laid on them. history of genius is in our favor. Look at the busts of Cicere, Voltaire, Locke, Pope, Cowper, &c., whose minds meagred their bodies till they became almost as othereal as the ardent and poured over, when fermentation will com-mence; and from this time to the end of the season, once a week, the frost should be skim-ham and Lincoln Fen, and other wealthy agriseason, once a week, the frost should be saimmed off, and the boards, weight, and sides of LEAN AND FAT.—We are decided admirers of leanness. Our greatest characters are neurally little, attenuated men; stomachless, meagre, lean, and lath like—beings who have half spiritualized themselves by keeping matter in due subordination to mind. A corpulent intellectualist is a contradiction in terms—a palpable catechrosis. One might as well talk of a pot-belied spirit. Obesity is a deadly foe to genius; in carnecus and unwieldy bodies the spirit is like a little guidgeon in a large, ferries. a not-bellied spirit. Obesity is a deadly foe to genius; in carneous and unwieldy bodies the spirit is like a little gudgeon in a large fryingpan of fat, which is either totally absorbed, or tastes of nothing but the lard.—Newark Daily Adv.

Not so. We take up the cudgels in behalf of fat men. Washington Irving, though not exactly of the Falstaff kidney, has a comfortable rotundity of stomach; Hamboldt the traveller is decidedly fat; Rossini the great composer is very fat; Theodore Hook the wit is very decidedly corpulant; John Quincy Adams is any thing but meagre and lath like; Daniel Webster will pass very well for a stout man; Bonaparte was more like a barrel than a bean pole; Walter Scott had a very respectable corporation; and it is notorious that the greatest aldermen are always the fattest.—N. F. Com.

We give it up, as to the Aldermen; and Howeverthis may be arranged between the Treasury and the Bank of England, it is clear that the loss ought not to fall on the public at large, and that some arrangement should be formed forthwith for the prevention of the great derangement in payments which is so much compared of by those whose transactions are extensive with the Bank of England, the Castons, and Excise.—London Chron.

Egretian Munnies.—Mr. Buckingham gives it his as opinion that there are not less than one hundred millions of mutumies entombed in Egypt, and he describes three singular uses that are now made of them.

For fuel.—The peasantry of Egypt procure them, break them in pieces, and use them for fuel—and as they have little or no wood, those dead human bodies serve them in its stend. The resingue matter and spices which were used in embalming them render them quite inflammable, and the odor which is given out at the period of burning, is said to be quite de-

For Medical purposes In most of the bodes there is found solid portions of the bitu-men or resinous drug which was used in em-balming. This is taken out of the bodies and sold in large quantities to Merchants at Cairo, and from thence it is sent to Portugal, Italy, France and England, even, where it is pulveri-sed by the apothecaries, done up in small pa-pers, and sold as a most excellent drug to cure inward bruises. And for this purpose hundreds of pounds of this stuff, is caten every year, taken from the inside of Egyptian num-

The other use made of them is for painting. A celebrated Painter in England informed Mr. Backingham that the backbone of the Egyptian mammay, when it is ground sufficiently fine, made the most excellent brown color of any material known.
